BIOPHILIA Defined: A dialogue with Art, Nature and Science Panel

Discussion

Speakers: Christopher Marley (Artist), Louise Irving (Museum Director for the Weiner Museum of Decorative Art), Violeta de la Serna (Moderator)

Exhibiting Name: Gallery of Amazing Things

Biophilia is a condition that, to one degree or another, affects all of humanity. It is an instinctive sense of kinship with the rest of the living, breathing world. Literally translated, it is “love of life.” Psychoanalyst Erich Fromm defined it as “the passionate love of life and all that is alive.”

In this panel discussion, we will explore how NY Times Best Selling Author and Internationally collected Artist, Christopher Marley, has created a symbiotic relationship with art and nature, successfully transforming the art of taxidermy into contemporary work. We will explore humanity’s need to connect with the natural world and evidences its stimulating power over us.

How Art, Fashion, Technology & Globalism Defined Art Deco Jewelry

Speaker: Ben Macklowe

Exhibiting Name: Macklowe Gallery

The period between the First and Second World Wars was a time of radical change in modern life. Art, fashion, and broadened international communications all played key roles in defining the styles and tastes of the era that was most famously dominated by the geometric lines and striking simplicity of the Art Deco movement. In this lecture, Mr. Macklowe will offer an in depth look at jewelry from the late 1910s to the late 1930s by exploring how different facets of the era came together to define a crucial moment in design history.
