Collecting, Display, and Interpretation of Decorative Arts from the Kunstkammer to Instagram

Throughout history there have been distinctive shifts in the collecting, display, and interpretation of decorative arts. Today, another shift can be evidenced by new approaches to these practices. Landmark museum exhibitions, innovative academic programs, rising auction prices, and social media trends highlight the recent explosion of public interest in the aesthetic and cultural significance of artifacts that extend far beyond the scope of painting and sculpture. This lecture will explore the growing decorative arts movement in the 21st century contextualized within a larger history of changing trends and attitudes in the collection, display, and interpretation of decorative arts.
